Notice concerning Nikkei 225 Leveraged index

The Nikkei 225 Leveraged Index is always calculated so that the rate of change of the index between two consecutive business days is twice the rate of change of the Nikkei Average over the same period. However, the rate of change of the Nikkei 225 Leveraged Index over a period for more than two business days does not generally calculate to twice the rate of change of the Nikkei Average, resulting in an unavoidable difference in calculations.

The difference between the rate of change of the Nikkei 225 Leveraged Index and twice the rate of change of the Nikkei Average over more than two business days varies depending on the path of movement of the Nikkei Average during the period and may occur in either positive or negative direction. However, in general when the price movement of the Nikkei Average repeats a rise and descent, it is more likely that the difference will occur in the negative direction. Moreover, the difference tends to become larger over longer periods.

Therefore, the NEXT FUNDS Nikkei 225 Leveraged Index Exchange Traded Fund is not generally suitable for long-term investment and is suitable for investment aimed at capturing market movements over relatively short periods.

Notice concerning Nikkei 225 Inverse Index

The Nikkei 225 Inverse Index is always calculated so that the rate of change of the index between two consecutive business days is the inverse of (i.e. minus one time) the rate of change of the Nikkei Average over the same period. However, the rate of change of the Nikkei 225 Inverse Index over periods of more than two business days does not generally calculate to the inverse of (i.e. minus one time) the rate of change of the Nikkei Average in the calculation, resulting in an unavoidable difference in calculations.
